It is amazing how much free information is available. The wealth of that information has been added to recently by the DTI who published their telework guidance. It is designed to cover workers who “use information and communication technologies to enable remote working from the office”.

It provides a checklist of issues to consider, including employment conditions, data protection, privacy, equipment, health and safety, organisation of work, training, taxation and collective rights.

It is well worth taking a look at if you have people working from home.

It can be located at www.dti.gov.uk/er/individual/telework.pdf
